Summertime!

Did you know that all children experience summer learning loss if they are not actively engaged in educational activities? It’s true! According to the Summer Learning Loss Study reported on huffingtonpost.com, your child could lose over 2 months of math and reading skills. This loss often contributes to the continuous achievement gap between black students and their white counterparts, and between low income and high income children. So, as a parent or guardian, I am sure you want to know if something can be done about this. Absolutely! Enrolling your child into a program that focuses on integrating reading and math with fun and exciting activities will help significantly. Doing so, will allow your child to enjoy their summer break, and maintain what they learned throughout the school year. Article By: Sereta Douse
